Colored Rights and Courage.

As a nation we have been slow to acknowledge the humanity of the African race. We mean, to practically acknowledge it.

In many of our free states, (our own not excepted,) a free colored man possesses the acknowledged right of holding property. The law recognizes and protects him in this right.

The free colored man cannot become a citizen of our state if he would. There are constitutional barriers which he cannot surmount in this direction.

All this is denied the colored man. And yet, by some peculiar interpretation of law and justice, the colored man who lives in Meriden is considered and treated as a citizen of the United States.

Now, dispensing with all radical tirades or dislikes toward the negro, we ask every thinking, honest man, is such a thing right, just, reasonable?

In all this, there is progress in the right direction. The administration and the people are compelled, as it were, by the force of events, to both consider and treat the negro as a man, and hence, as entitled to the rights and immunities of manhood.

... Capt. E. T. Goodrich, of the 9th O. V., and Lieut. N. P. Ives, of General Harland's staff, were in town, yesterday, and paid their respects to THE RECORDER.

from their island, and established their independence. Hayti became a republic under that remarkable negro and statesman who said to the committee that drew up his constitution: "Make it the first line of my constitution that I know no difference in religious beliefs."

After Toussaint died in Napoleon's filthy dungeon, in the castle of St. Louis, which looked "out upon the mountains of Switzerland," the negroes of Saint Domingo were roused to deathless courage.

General Jackson commended the colored battalion, connected with his army, before the battle of New Orleans, in the following eloquent words: "Soldiers, from the shores of Mobile I collected you to arms; I invited you to share in the perils and to divide the glory of your white countrymen."

Finally, let us consider the black man's record in our present struggle. It is a glorious one. He has written his claim to fidelity, courage, freedom, with his own blood.

Milliken's Band tells how a colored regiment marched fearlessly, with dashless courage, to the lurid lips of hostile cannon. Fort Hudson, with its crimson record, tells us how black men accepted death and wounds worse than death, while surging against a line of blinding white guns.

There is much to do yet, but we will soon have Charleston.—Wagner was full of dead men and horses. We took eighty prisoners at Greg. We would have taken many more, but many of them left before light, and we were not aware they had gone.

... Mr. A. L. Harvey has left upon our table a desirable variety of pear, the Duchess d'Angouleme.

Business vs. Prosperity.

BUSINESS thrives! Everybody feels that, who walks our streets, or looks out on the busy crowd, that hurries to its avocations with the early morning and returns when the work of the day is over.

Business firms enlarge their sphere of operations, and productive industry crowds in with her implements of labor. Others drive the old machine a little faster than they used, for supply must keep pace with demand, and demand is pressing.

Here is work for everybody—work that pays—legitimate work. And because men will have it so, illegitimate work—for here, again, supply keeps pace with demand, even when the devil makes it, and though men must stoop to serve him; for no man ever served him without stooping from the royal dignity of manhood.

Labor is productive and laborers are many; never more so. Our population has greatly increased. These "hanging hills" never looked down on so many dwellings, so densely packed; and these rural districts never echoed to so many voices. Money flows in. What, then? Are we a prosperous people? We submit, this does not prove it.

The population has greatly increased. A more pertinent question cannot be raised than just this: What is the genius, spirit, aim of the population? Growth is not necessarily prosperity. Money is a good thing, rightly used; but money, as an end, is ignoble. Money is of value only for its uses. If they are purely or mainly sensual, they are ignoble too.

The question of prosperity runs deeper than you thought. Money abounds. To what use is it put? The village grows. What is its leading characteristic? What are its institutions? What its public morals? What can it boast? If vice has greater sway than virtue—if business is of more account than morals—if things are more esteemed than men—if material interests overshadow spiritual interests, what then? We do not say this is a statement of our case. We do not say that these possibilities indicate actual tendencies, but they are worth thinking of. And it is worth while to inquire, what are the conditions and indices of genuine prosperity? And whether there be in the midst of us elements, destructive, gnawing at the root of all this fair show of strength and growth, and whether there be some lack not yet supplied, to which we should give immediate attention.

As a citizen, I look with an honest pride and satisfaction on our growth and material advancement, but by no means without solicitude for the result and inquire, earnestly, To what end? ONE OF THE PEOPLE.

women are not free from his malignant and vile assaults. His distinguishing characteristics are an excess of self-esteem, and the ability to write caustic and cruel paragraphs on persons and things.

We think it would be well, however, for those attacked by the aforesaid editor to remember and act upon an incident related by the venerable Lyman Beecher. His character was bitterly assailed by a man of bad notoriety. The doctor made no reply. Finally a friend asked him why he did not notice and refute the scurrilous attack. "Well," said the shrewd divine, "when a student, I was returning to my room, late one night, after a recitation, I saw in the path just before me, what I supposed, was a little dog. On the impulse of the moment, I threw my text book at it. But I concluded afterward to never again discharge a quarto at a polcat."

EDITORS OF THE RECORDER:

I send you the following extracts from letters recently received by Mr. James Newton, of Hanover, from his son in the Tenth Connecticut Volunteers, now on Morris Island. Young Newton has been with his regiment in all its battles, and has behaved with marked courage and fidelity. Although comrades have been wounded or killed at his side, he has escaped thus far unharmed.

HEADQUARTERS 10th Reg't C. V., Morris Island, Sept. 2d, 1863.

DEAR PARENTS:—We have not got Charleston yet, and, I think, it will take longer than we at first anticipated. We have spoiled Sumter, and can take Wagner and Greg, but Moultrie and Ripley we cannot get at, unless the navy assaults them with more pluck.

The navy is doing very little, and the iron-clads act as if they were afraid to get within range of the rebel guns. They stand off, and throw shells over us, and nearly half of their missiles burst over our forts and rifle-pits.

We have rifle-pits so near Wagner that we can throw stones into the rebel fort. In fact, we took these rifle-pits from the enemy by storm, and they are so near the fort that the rebels cannot depress their guns so as to hit our troops in these trenches.

We are lying apparently still, that is, we only fire occasionally to keep our neighbors interested and stirred up. But, were I at liberty to write some things, you would not think we were lying very still. One of these days, the chivalry will hear from us in an unexpected quarter, and to their sorrow.

MORRIS ISLAND, Sept. 7th, 1863. THE ISLAND IS OURS. We took possession of Wagner and Greg, this morning. Our regiment and the Massachusetts Twenty-fourth were first inside. Our colors were the first to wave over this rebel stronghold, from which our brave men were once repulsed for want of support.

There is much to do yet, but we will soon have Charleston.—Wagner was full of dead men and horses. We took eighty prisoners at Greg. We would have taken many more, but many of them left before light, and we were not aware they had gone.

We started to charge the fort and found the rear guard just leaving. We told them not to hurry, and detained some of them as hostages. We were very fortunate, losing none killed and but few were wounded, all slightly. But I can write no more at present, as we have much to do to-day. We are only resting to prepare our coffee, and then we will advance to secure a new place for our siege guns.

Your dear son, ISAAC NEWTON.

Believe Ezra can do the "butchering."
