The Plucky 10th Connecticut Regiment. Of the fact that the 10th Connecticut fought most nobly and bravely at the battle of Roanoke Island there is no doubt, yet an impression may have gained ground, in some quarters, that other troops accomplished more in the reduction of the batteries than they. The simple facts, as related to us by an officer, show that they performed a most, if not the most important part in the action of that day. The following from the lips of Sergeant W. H. Webb, one of the returned wounded, published in the New London Chronicle, is perhaps as correct a statement as has as yet appeared. He says, that immediately on landing, four companies were ordered out on picket duty and remained out until late at night in a drenching rain, being then relieved by the Massachusetts boys.

At 7 o'clock, in the morning, the advance order was given, Gen. Foster leading the colum. After marching three-fourths of a mile, they occupied a central position in the attack on the batteries, being supported by artillery on the left. Owing to the nature of the locality, three companies of the 10th received the brunt of the enemy's fire, being companies A., D and H. There they stood amid a hot fire, the enemy directing their efforts at them and the artillery mainly, until nearly all their supply of ammunition-forty rounds-was used up, when an order was given to Hawkins's Zouaves to charge. They came up from the rear and charged pell mell over the Connecticut boys, who at the instant were lying down to load, and with shouts and yells made for the battery, meeting a momentary repulse; and afterward gaining the inside of the enemy's works; but the Massachusetts boys had entered already by Capt. Jepson of Co. A., with whom we have conversed, related similar facts and also said the Connecticut 10th would have been glad to have received the same order that Hawkins's Zouaves did. The Commanding General, however, probably thought they were not in condition as they had been placed immediately in front so long a time, to draw the enemy's fire, and allow the other plans of flanking and charging to succeed. Gen. Foster complimented the 10th highly after the battle, saying he never knew regulars to fight better. When the Connecticut troops had with others chased the rebels to the upper end of the Island, it appears they re-embarked, as Sergeant Webb says:

Our boys re-embarked immediately after the battle, and by some remarkable oversight, have been cooped up on board the ship ever since. As a consequence of this, nearly every man in the regiment is on the sick list or complaining. Not twenty men in the whole come and are in to make a forced march of thirty miles. Co. A. was stationed as a guard over the rebel prisoners. Some of the rebels were praying men, and held meetings on board the vessel, in which some of the members of Co. A. took active part. The rebels prayed earnestly for the Southern Confederacy, and the others were equally earnest in their prayers for the speedy downfall of that bogus government.

New Pampshire Election.

The New Hampshire Patriot in giving the result of the election in that State, after admitting that the Republicans and their loyal allies have swept the State clean, electing their State ticket and both branches of the Legislature, consoles itself with the following reflections:

The third party vote is ridiculously insignificant; it will scarcely exceed twelve hundred By an examination of the votes it will be evident that full four-fifths of them came from the Democratic party. These, with some two thousand or more of our men in the army, and the like number prevented by the bad traveling from going to the polls, account for the entire reduction of our vote. The majority against us is probably nearly a thousand less than it was last year; and if there had been no third party ticket in the field, we should have reduced the majority against us fall one-half. The Patriot adds that "the day is not far distant when the democracy will recover their ascendancy." It is certainly distant one year from the date of the late election.

Congress will probably, it certainly should inquire into the reasons why, at the approach of the Merrimac at Hampton Roads, the Min nesota and Roanoke were for the time unserviceable, and why the frigate St. Lawrence one of the best ships on the station, was not 7 o'clock. ready for action; also why, when they were moved up toward the scene of action, they grounded so soon. Have our naval officers at Hampton Roads neglected the important precaution of sounding for miles around, or were ntent, and weighing 3,284 pounds, was raised to the belfry of St. John's church, in Bridgeport on Thesday but the State." Its rates are as reasonable as the port, on Tuesday last.

Amos Kendall has given his views of emancipation in a short letter. The following contains the gist of it. The work of emancipation content with the progress as it is. Mr. Ken- of delegates:

"I appeal to the advocates of emancipation in the North to be content with the progress which their principles are making, not through the subversion of the Constitution, but under cover of its authority. Probably four-fifths of all the slaves in the United States are now lawfully subject to confiscation on account of the treason of their masters. How far the forfeiture of their slaves, their other property, or their lives, shall be carried is a question of expediency only, and involves no constitutional question of power. Four-fifths of all the slaves may be thus lawfully set free, and the emancipation of the other fifth would soon follow.

In this view of the subject what motives have the abolitionists of the North to press their Government into an abandonment of the Constitution, by making a general emancipament, the direct object of the war, thus giving a color of right to the rebellion, and in a measure paralyzing the arms of loyal men, especially in the South?

Mr. Kendall may be assured that these are the opinions of ninety out of every hundred of the people of the North.

Mr. H. W. The Quinnipiack Debating Society Celebrated their fourth anniversary, on Friday evening last, at their Hall in Water street. The members of the Society, with their ladies, enjoyed themselves exceedingly, reading and responding to toasts, singing patriotic songs, and partaking of the elegant and bountiful collation prepared by ladies who know how to do it. The gentleman who responded to one of the regular teasts-"Our Absent Members who have gone to the War"-stated that twentyone persons, who had been members of the So eiety, had gone into the army and navy to defend our starry banner from wicked traitor hands. Dr. Holland's Lecture at Music Hall on Thursday evening, on "Working and Shirking," was one of those outspoken earnest efforts that usually command attention and thought. His treatment of his subject was plainly and unflinchingly to the point aimed at, that of good to American Society. The Doctor is quite professional in his way, and when he now being finished at Greenpoint, will make discerns a fault like an honest physician pres the nucleus of an iron navy, scribes his medicine without much sugar coating. His lecture cannot fail to improve the mind, and impress the spirit of every true lover of mankind and his country. His rapier pass at the "society" classifications which Americans indulge in, was a master's stroke in the direction of the humane principle which ought to be the guidance of man's footsteps.

At Fair Haven.

The dramatic entertainment of tableaux, paromines, &c, which was given at Fair Haven, ast evening, was exceedingly creditable to the amateur artists engaged in the performance. It rarely occurs that a few young ladies and gentlemen of a village can with limited preparation and resourses of dress and fixtures, present such an attractive bill and execute their parts so admirably. We presume they could do exceedingly well at Music Hall, in this city, in furnishing a couple of entertainments if they could spare their time.

Progress of our Cause.

The cause of the Union has been going forward with such overwhelming success the past few weeks, that we have hardly had time to contemplate the few reverses and disappointments we have met with. The disasters at Hampton Roads were very sad and momentarily depressing; yet they can have no serious effect on the war. The fiendish spirit of the the Legislature sat here in 1858, and is doubtrebels will rejoice that it has sacrificed so many more "Yankee" lives, although the destruction cannot advance their cause, which they know is inevitably doomed. The safe retreat of their army from Manassas

DESOLATION VISIBLE ON EVERY HAND-OUR SOLDIERS BURYING THE DEAD KILLED AT THE BULL BUN DISASTER-THE ATTEMPT IS CONGRESS TO SUPERCEDE GEN. McCLELLAN. Washington, March 15, 1862.

I have just returned from a trip to Centrerille and Manassas, which has occupied two days, and they have proved days of hard work and disgusting associations. The desolation everywhere apparent-the destruction of property of all kinds, and without any reference to its ultimate value, is without a parallel in the history of war. Farm houses ruined, barns burned, bridges destroyed, railroad stations de-Congregational Church (Rev. Dr.Cleaveland's) fields laid waste and fences burned up, and last pride and boast of the country. It was a sad scene to look upon, and brought up reflections which cannot, at this time, be written er commented upon. It is enough to know that the once loval portion of our Republic, the father land of the confederacy, has become recreant to her pledge, and gone forth false to all her vows of loyalty to the Constitution and the Union. Men, women and children, servants and bondmen, have all joined in the general stampede. With the exception of a few old women and worn out negroes, there are none left to tell the sad tale of desolation and ruin. At Centreville, and in the vicinity of Bull Run, a most disgusting spectacle presented itself. The battle-field of the ever memorable men and horses which had never been buried. The Union soldiers were, on Friday, engaged to eat. The Merrimac ran down near the Rip in covering the sad remains of those who fell in battle at that time, having laid more than six months exposed to the elements. But one graved on his sword belt which still encircled what once represented vigorous manhood in the service of his country—but alas! now only May heaven protect the widow and orphans he has left behind : and the country, in whose service he fell, respect his memory. He wore no gilded honors of rank or position but fell in the ranks as a patriot soldier with his arms upon him. George Ingersoll has so nobly served protect his wife some of them apparently just as they fell, with even the saddles and bridles upon them, show ing that the rebels who have occupied this part of Virginia, have never attempted to secure even what might have been of some value to them. It is said to be the only case in the his tory of the world where the enemy who came off victorious refused to bury the dead of their enemies. What a history of America is yet to be written-the land of freedom and equal rights, the heritage of the oppressed of all nations, and yet the land now made desolate by civil war and its accompaning evils.

From present appearances the rebellion is fas dying out. The South are demoralized and diseartened; the army of the rebels is but one nass of treachery and distrust; they are gradually falling back into the interior of the ountry, with an evident intention of making pursuit, reparing railroads and bridges as they proceed. Gen. McDowell's division has the adrance, and will soon be in the heart of Virginia.

The efforts of the radicals in Congress to deose General McClellan, for political purposes, neets with universal condemnation. The officers and soldiers of the army are indignant, and if his removal be accomplished it will prove most disastrous to the country. Nothing but the firmness of the President now prevents such policy being carried out. Gen. McClellan bears all their taunts as a soldier should. He calmly waits for their plans and projects to take effect, and stands ready at a moment's notice to to surrender his commission when the President

Hartford Post-Office Again.

The Post Master General has made a fina disposition of the Post-Office quarrel in Hartford by refusing to remove the office from its present location. He has written a letter to Senator Dixon stating his decision, and supporting it in a very able and patriotic argument. He says that he is sorry to disagree with Mr Dixon; yet that he is confirmed in his judgment by the action of Mr. Welles.

Mr. Blair takes very much the position which we, in a more humble way, have all along assumed on this subject. We are not disposed to censure Mr. Dixon and others who have thought this a mere question of expediency, in which the Government was invited to consult its convenience, and stop a mere clamor. We thought it a question affecting the rights of every man in the State; and we are glad that the Government has decided it in that view and decided it in the right way.
