MRS. MOODY BURIED Body of Former Wallingford Woman Brought There from Pasadena.

Wallingford, Conn., May 10.—Grace Butler Mix was the daughter of Honorable John Butler Mix and Emily Hull, Wallingford, her first home, lies among the sun-swept hills of Connecticut and along the higher branches of the Quinipiac river. On the nineteenth of March, 1873, she came to this home on the crest of the North Main street hill, where she lived until her marriage to Rev. Francis Miner Moody, whose birthplace was Buffalo, N. Y. Her father, who died May 25, 1857, entered the army at the age of seventeen, in the year 1862, and served in the Civil war three years. After his return he was in the Connecticut State Militia five years. About fifteen years later he represented his town in the Connecticut legislature for one term, and was afterward for two years the first selectman of the town of Wallingford.

Her mother, Mrs. Mix, is still living in Pasadena, California. From the Wallingford high school Grace Mix went for three years to Rosemary Hall, a select classical school which was then located in her native town. History, English literature, French, German, Greek and Latin were among the studies in which she took high rank for scholarship. During the intervals of her school work she studied art with Miss Mary Ellen Hobson and piano music with Franz Milchs.

The rare beauty of her singing voice was early recognized. She acquired proficiency in the art of vocalization through years of study with one of Francesco Lamperti's scholars, and was a most delightful exponent of the saneness of the Italian school of vocal culture. Her teacher said, "Her voice is like a bunch of ripe grapes." For years she was esteemed as one of the best contralto singers in Connecticut, and as a soloist was a member of the quartets in some of the leading churches of Wallingford, Meriden, New Haven and New Britain. She attracted many hearts by the sympathetic quality of her voice, and by her unusually intelligent interpretation of both sacred and secular songs.

At the age of fourteen she united with the Wallingford Baptist church, and at twenty-two she joined her fortunes with those of Mr. Moody, a Methodist preacher, who was a graduate of Yale university and of Garret Biblical Institute. They were married September of the year 1895, while he was pastor of the Methodist Episcopal church in West Suffield, Conn. In their respective fields of labor at Bloomfield, Conn.; Floral Park, Long Island, N. Y.; Reading, Conn.; and Grace church, in Wakefield of the Bronx, New York city, she served each church to the full measure of her frail strength.

While they were living in New York city, her physicians advised a change because of her broken health. Mr. Moody asked for an appointment in southern California and accepted the charge at Elsinore in Riverside county, in the latter part of December, 1901. There they made their home as soon as possible. The change in mid-winter to this mountain-girt town on Delightful Lake Elsinore in inland southern California, was most beneficial. In less than a year she partly regained her health under the care of Pasadena physicians. Then as their presiding Elder Sterling said: "She threw herself with her accustomed energy and executive ability into the work of the little church and was loved by the people as if it had been given mortal life." But once more she wrought beyond her strength. There, for the fifth time she broke down and was removed for cooler weather to Pasadena in July 1904. Her gain in August was remarkable; but in September mid-month she went down again, and from that time on had few days that were free from pain.

All the signs pointed to Pasadena as the place affording her the best chance for recovery. She could not go with Mr. Moody to his next appointment at Garden Grove, where he worked for one year alone, then took other work that he might better care for her that was stricken. In these last months and years of constant suffering she was habitually cheerful and the comforter of many who came to give rather than to get comfort. Though confined to her bed nearly all the time for the last three and one-half years, whenever strength was given, her hands were busy with one of her many kinds of art work, and in loving preparation of Christmas gifts for many friends. Her worth as a choir leader was widely known and praised, wherever she was able to take charge of the music. She cherished high ideals and strove with all her strength to reach them. At her own request her body was brought to Wallingford for burial. The following day, Saturday, May the second, in the sunshine of one of the brightest and most beautiful of Spring days, her old-time friends gathered in the new cemetery near her first home.

Union Pacific Bond Issue Awaited With Great Interest—Money Situation. Henry Clews Considers Proposed Advance in Freight Rates Ill-Timed.

Consideration of the improvement in the investment situation as it favors the plans for new financing of the railroad corporations continued to dominate speculative sentiment in the securities market last week. There was additional evidence that supplies of capital would be forthcoming on good security to meet the requirements of the railroads and obviate the embarrassments they have been under to carry on work necessary to the successful conduct of their business. The promised relief from this difficulty is of such importance that it has served to override the effect of some of the developments of a less favorable nature from the side of business and industry. The allotments on subscriptions to the Pennsylvania $40,000,000 consolidated four per cent. bonds showed an over-subscription twenty times, both in New York and London, and this after eliminating bids for under $15,000 in New York. After due allowance for the high security of the bond, the attractive investment basis on which it was offered and the premium bid over the allotment prices before the bids were closed, which prompted bidders to send in over-subscriptions to secure the amount they really wanted, the transaction was regarded as striking testimony to the recuperation of capital supplies. The quick re-sale by the underwriting syndicate at a good profit of the interborough notes was corroborative evidence.

So also was the price realized for nearly $10,000,000 of New York revenue bonds on a declining interest basis from 3 3/4 per cent. to 3 1/2 per cent., compared with the six per cent. which the city was compelled to pay on the preceding issue of this class of obligations. Rates of smaller amounts of less conspicuous bonds were reported from time to time. The demand for existing bonds at the stock exchange and through bond houses broadened moderately at the same time. The coming Union Pacific bond issue is awaited with great interest, on this account, as an additional test of the stability of the improvement. The amount of the issue, while not announced, is expected to range from $25,000,000 to $50,000,000 and the terms of the offering and the extent of the general demand for the issue will be keenly studied as an index of the investment outlook.

The conspicuous place held by the Harriman Pacific in the stock market movement and the large controlled operations by houses usually employed by interests largely concerned in those companies created an impression that the rise in stocks was fostered by those interests with a view to improving conditions for the pending Union Pacific loan. A benevolent control of the market by the great banking and financial interests in concert was supposed to be exercised partly for the purpose of furthering proposed new financial issues, partly with a view to aid in restoring general confidence in the financial situation and partly from the conviction that conditions had become sufficiently from the disorder of the financial crisis to call for a realignment of values of securities on the basis of investment return.

An important factor in furthering this view was the action of railroad officials to bring about an advance in the rates for freight transportation. Extended conferences were held to this end and the project was avoided as a necessary step in view of the heavy shrinkage in traffic and the obstacles to an adequate reduction in operating cost to meet this shrinkage. The policy of rate advances came in for criticism and opposition, not only among shippers but from some of the railroad officials themselves, making it practically impossible for the plan to be carried out. This had some effect in checking the rise in stocks and causing hesitation in the movement. The same criticism has been heard of the policy of the principal iron producers to hold prices, where the stagnation in demand and the general course of prices of other commodities is pointed to as calling for reduction in prices to revive the demand.

The money market has continued easy and reserves still accumulate in banks in spite of the withdrawal of great deposits by the treasury department. The continued overflow from the treasury by reason of the current deficit neutralizes this action. The gold overflow has been checked, the Bank of France having already effected a substantial recuperation of its holdings, while foreign subscriptions to the Pennsylvania bond issue and the New York City revenue bonds establish foreign credits against which to draw in the foreign exchange market.
